The Northern Arapaho tribe will plan and implement a comprehensive system of mental health services for children and adolescents with severe emotional disturbance on the Wind River Indian Reservation. The reservation is geographically the second largest reservation in the United States. The program philosophy is that children with severe emotional disturbance can best be served within their local community if adequate support is provided for the caretakers and the child's treatment needs. Goals and objectives for the first year for children and adolescents with severe emotional disturbance include: 1) development of a consolidated system of mental health services and funding to improve service delivery and to include case management, outreach, aftercare, and increased intensive services; 2) development of a community mental health planning and development board to manage the delivery of mental health services and the designation of the reservation as a mental health catchment area; and 3) the design and implementation of policies and strategies to insure the full involvement and partnership of families in order to formalize a parent support network and advocacy program.
